

maker" in Issaquah, Washington. He filled his combined home and candy shop, built in Swiss/Austrian chalet style, with wood carvings, sculpture, paintings and other works of art pertaining to the mountains. In 1949, at 50, he climbed the 14,780-foot Matterhorn, and three years later he carried an Olympic flag to Mount Blanc, "atop the roof of Europe," on the opening day of the 1952 Olympic Games.

Over the years, Julius' business profited through the sale of his quality candies which were in great demand. This profit was put to good use in building a chapel dedicated to all mountaineers who have lost their lives in the mountains. It was named in honor of his good friend Luis Trenker of Bolzano, Italy.

At the same time, a non-profit foundation was established with Julius' help. Its purpose is to build high-altitude shelters of a "life-saving" nature. This foundation has been given the name "High Alpine Shelters Foundation." Those of us who were his friends will miss his enthusiasm for life, his singing as he climbed in the mountains, his jogging to the mailbox (even in his seventies) and his ever cheerful outlook.

GEORGE R. SENNER

JOHN DUPUY GRAHAM

John D. (Jack) Graham was one of the most vigorous members of the American Alpine Club. Although he began his hiking and mountaineering in 1927, he did the major number of his climbs after he had passed the age of fifty. He was remarkably athletic and climbed very fast. At the age of 55 he kept up with the famous French guide Lionel Terray when they climbed all five peaks of Mont Blanc in one day in 1951. That same summer Jack climbed all of the 23 peaks in the Alps that were over 14,000 feet. In 1959 and 1960 he climbed all fifteen peaks over 16,000 feet in Africa, including the twin peaks of Mount Kenya, Batian and Nelion, in one day. But the achievement which encouraged many of us to think that we still have a few years left in the mountains came in 1961 when he climbed Mount McKinley at the age of 65.

Jack's interest in setting records sometimes obscured his deep affection for the mountains. But he loved to climb; he loved the mountains, and he had a fond regard for the American Alpine Club which he joined in 1951. He was a member of the AdAmAn Club of Colorado Springs and especially enjoyed the annual New Year's Eve climb of Pike's Peak.

He was born March 21, 1896, in Philadelphia and graduated from the University of Pennsylvania Wharton School of Finance and Commerce in 1918. He served with distinction in the Army in France in World War I where he won the nation's second highest award for valor, the Distinguished Service Cross. In World War II he served in the Fifth Air Force in the Pacific with the rank of Major. After the war he lived in Santa Barbara, California where he died on February 15, 1981 from a lingering illness. He left one son, George Ross Graham, four stepsons, Benjamin Cowles Hammett, Lawrence Thayer Hammett, William Regan Graham, George Emlen Graham, and 14 grandchildren.

Jack set a remarkable example as to how we can continue to enjoy the mountains all through our lives and his enthusiasm for the hills will be missed by all who knew him.

KENNETH M. WINTERS

The climbing community has lost one of its most conscientious friends. Ken died of a heart attack while leading a climb on Mount Shasta on May 24, 1981.

Born in Portland, Oregon on April 19, 1923, he was graduated from Lincoln High School and attended Reed College. During World War II he served with the Mountain Troops, and later with the Infantry. He was wounded while in combat in Germany. Returning to Portland, he was graduated from Reed College in 1948. In 1950 he married Anne Wheeler.

He started working with his father's insurance agency, then trained as an accountant and worked for a time with the Internal Revenue Service. Upon his father's death, he returned to the insurance business.

Ken joined the Mazamas in 1961. His contributions to the club over the next 19 years are outstanding: he began leading climbs and hikes in 1965; was recipient of all climbing and climb leadership awards; awarded the Parker Cup in 1976; served two sessions on the Executive Council; was elected President in 1972 and again in 1975; served on numerous committees: Climbing, Outing, Trail Trips, Publications, Trust, Budget, Long Range Planning, Insurance, House and Program.

Ken was an awesome source of energy. He ran several marathons, one of which was completed shortly before he had open-heart surgery. As a climber, he was eternally optimistic. No matter how rotten the weather or the route, his vote always was: "Let's hang on for a while . . . things will improve." As climb leader, his planning and organization were unsurpassed. Concern for party safety was always foremost in his mind. Ken climbed extensively in the U.S., Canada, and in Europe.

Ken was a frequent contributor of articles and photographs to the Mazama Annual Publication, as well as to other publications.

He led several major outings, including one to Banff National Park.

Ken is survived by his wife, Anne, two daughters, Jane Snyder of
